

Springfield Research Newsletter

ISSUE NUMBER 34
July - Sept., 1985

INFORMATION SOURCES FOR THIS ISSUE

This issue contains information from the following sources:

- * Letters Received, Office of the Chief of Ordnance (OCO), 1866-81
- * General Correspondence, OCO, 1917 and 1920-30
- * Records of the Allied Expeditionary Force (AEF), 1917-19
- * Records of U. S. Army Troops in China

TRAPDOOR-ERA NOTES

* At least 366 muzzle loading muskets with rusted barrels were converted to smooth bore (i. e., retaining the standard musket configuration) by Springfield.

* Gen. Jno. E. Smith ordered a sporting rifle with octagon barrel and other special features in Oct., 1868.

* Three browned Model 1866 rifles were sent to the Ordnance Office in Nov., 1868.

* In Dec., 1868, Springfield reported 200 trowel bayonets and scabbards ready for issue.

In Feb., 1870. Springfield reported that they had made "a breechloading pistol with a system like that of the '68 Musket".

* In Jan., 1871, the Chief of Ordnance ordered Springfield to produce a Remington rifle with single set trigger.

* In March, 1871, J. A. J. Creswell, the Postmaster General, ordered a musket "with stock same as Cadet Musket, Model of 1866. The arm is to be fine sighted and provided with a set trigger; the barrel to be browned;" and his name stamped on the tang of the butt plate. Two months later, the Assistant PM General ordered a half-stock sporting rifle.

* In Nov., 1871, Springfield was ordered to make 20 Model 1870 carbines to be sent to San Antonio Arsenal for sale to officers.

* During March, 1872, some Model 1868 breech blocks were altered to Model 1870.

* Lt. Geo. C. Wallace, 7th Cav., ordered a sporting rifle in March, 1874.

* A sporting carbine was made for Lt. Geo. W. McKee in Aug., 1874.

SPRINGFIELD ARMORY PRODUCTION SUMMARY, FISCAL YEAR 1881

Continuing the publication of Springfield production summaries, this issue contains the data for fiscal year 1881.

WWI ORDNANCE NOTES

* Approximately 2,000 Krag rifles were used in France. They were taken overseas by the 10th - 19th Engineers (Railway) and were shipped back to the U. S. in late 1917 and early 1918.

* The AEF records indicated that the '03 rifle was the primary front-line shoulder weapon of WWI. Although Model 1917 rifles saw extensive use in France, they were assigned to support troops except in cases where '03s were not available. The Model 1917 rifle was not liked because of its lack of windage adjustment in the rear sight, and also because pierced primers caused blowbacks into the shooter's eye.

* The 1st Army allowance of '03 rifles equipped with telescope (i. e., Warner-Swazey) was 96 per division. Some telescopic musket sights were shipped to France without rifles.

* In 1918, 30,000 '03 rifles were assembled from parts by Ordnance Repair Shops in France.

* Winchester .22 automatic rifles (presumably Model 03) were used at Aerial Gunnery Schools in France. They were to be equipped with Lyman tang sights.

* In Sept., 1918, POW escort companies were to be equipped with 50% rifles and 50% riot shotguns. At least 2,100 riot guns were shipped to the 77th Division. Winchester M1897 shotguns were tried in trench warfare, with mixed results; most doughboys preferred the rifle because of its increased range. Double barrel shotguns were used in France by the Pigeon Service.

* In Dec., 1918, 500 '03 rifles equipped with Winder Tube Sights were shipped to France for test.

* Many Model 1905 bayonets were blued in France, using an Italian process.

* The Air Service Rifles were shipped to France in Oct., 1918, but they arrived too late for combat use. They were originally procured as an emergency weapon for use in aircraft. The AEF correspondence indicates that 907 were sent to France. They were tested to determine the desirability of adopting the 25-shot magazine with which they were equipped.

* In April, 1919, the Ogden extended magazine for the M1911 pistol was tested in France. This magazine was invented by Mr. Jehu Ogden of Toronto, Canada. Both 20- and 30-round versions were tested in comparison with the standard 7-round magazine. They were found not suitable for several reasons, including: fatigue occurring in the magazine springs, which resulted in failure to feed the last 6 cartridges; excessive spring tension, causing difficulty in loading the last few cartridges; breakage of the magazine caused by recoil of the pistol combined with inertia of the magazine; and difficulties in devising a means for carrying the long magazines and developing tactical doctrine for their use.

* Split stocks caused by firing the VB rifle grenades led to the addition of the rear recoil bolt in '03 stocks.

* An AEF rifle, pistol, and musketry competition was held at LeMans, France, in May, 1919. There were 3,500 competitors, and Model 1903 rifles were used almost exclusively. The #10 rear sight slide was found preferable to the #5.

MODEL 1903 ORDNANCE NOTES

* In 1916, only Life Members of the NRA and rifle clubs were allowed to buy Model 1903 rifles. Annual Members could purchase only Krags.

* In 1920, unhardened receivers were sold to Adolph for use in prize rifles.

* In Dec., 1920, Springfield proposed making rifles with heavy barrels ("pressure barrels") fitted with 'scope blocks for 5-A Winchester sight.

* The initial lot of 2,000 M1922M1 rifles were to be drilled and tapped for 'scope sight "in same manner as those now made for sale to members of the NRA". (This note from 3/6/28). Issuance of M1922M1 rifles commenced 4/4/29.

* As of Sept., 1930, there were still 4,387 Pedersen devices on hand at Springfield. They were directed to be retained until storage space becomes critical.

* Inspection of the 15th Inf. troops stationed in China in 1933 revealed that all their bayonets had been plated.
