SUBSCRIPTION FEE INCREASE

Effective Jan. 1, 1986, the subscription rate for this Newsletter is being increased to $10 per year. This increase reflects higher expenses; it will also let us put out more 16-page issues.

SERIAL NUMBER BOOK, VOLUME 2

This issue of the Newsletter will serve as the cutoff point for serial number data to appear in Vol. 2 of Serial Numbers of U. S. Martial Arms. Vol. 2 will have all new data; it will not be cumulative with the first volume. It is scheduled to be published in early March.

ARMY ORDNANCE NOTES

* In March, 1918, the Ordnance Dept. was directed to procure 500 "telescopic sights, Marine Corps Model" from Winchester.

* In mid-1943, the stock pins used in M1903A3 rifles were abandoned in favor of the recoil bolts used on earlier models of the M1903 rifle.

* The summary of small arms development projects for March, 1944 listed the following:

1) Under "Development of Expendable and Concealable Weapons", final shipment of 9,750 Stingers, Cal. .22, T1E2 was reported. Production of 10,000 Stingers, cal. .22, T2 was to be completed in six weeks.

2) Experiments with cartridges, shot, M12 and M15 with various types of barrels for the M1911A1 pistol.

3) Improvement projects for Pistol, Cal. .45, M1911A1 included plastic recoil buffers and magazine followers.

4) Carbine projects included plastic stocks, malleable iron receivers, an improved semi-automatic mechanism based on the gas cut-off and expansion principle, an improved sling, and development of a bayonet and bayonet lug assembly.

5) The first M1 rifle equipped with telescopic sight (Rifle, U.S., Cal. 30, M1E2, equipped with Telescopic Sight for Snipers) had been tested by the Infantry Board.

6) Other developments for the M1 rifle included a roller operating lug and special operating rod (M1E3); gas cut-off and expansion principle (M1E4); a folding stock, shortened rifle (M1E5); and improvement of the finish of gas cylinders. Also, a T7 rifle was under development.

7) Other developments for rifles included fluted chambers, button rifling, sights for night firing, and improved bayonets.

8) 9mm conversion kits were under development for the M3 submachine gun.

9) Standardized shotguns included: Winchester M12, Stevens M520-30 and M620-A, and Remington M11A and M31.

US Navy Ordnance Notes

* As late as 1938, the Navy still had at least 16 Sub-target Gun Machines on hand.

* In March, 1942, the Navy Bureau of Ordnance ordered 30 Lyman telescopic sights and 30 Maxim silencers to be sent to the Naval Mine Depot for use on Model 1903 rifles in connection with "Project Friendship". (Note that the Navy never officially adopted the M1 rifle during WWII).

* Tests on plastic bayonets were conducted by the Navy in Jan., 1943.

* R. F. Sedgeley developed what was know as a Fist Gun for the Navy (the official nomenclature was "Hand Firing Mechanism, Mk II, Cal. .38 Special"). They were single-shot weapons firing a .38 shot cartridge, and apparently they were built into a glove and designed to fire on contact.

* The Navy attempted to procure special automatic shotguns for use in aerial target practice. They were to have 10-shot magazines and be capable of functioning with very light loads. In March 1942, samples were submitted by Remington and Savage.

* In Sept., 1943, firing pins of the Colt Ace .22 pistol were modified to allow standard .45 firing pin stops to be used with them.

* Smith & Wesson revolvers converted to fire the .30 carbine cartridge were tested in 1944.

* Colt automatic pistols in calibers .32, .380, and even .25 were issued to shore-based officers.

SERIAL NUMBER DATA IN THIS ISSUE

Space limitations prevent me from commenting individually on the many types of arms for which serial number data is included in this issue; hopefully, the headings and usage data will give enough information on them.

There is a correction needed for one Trapdoor rifle listed in Newsletter no. 33: 318998 was listed as model 82R, when it is actually an 82B.
