Miscellaneous News and Notes

Research During This Period Confederate Muster Rolls

I went through the muster rolls for many cavalry units, looking for regimental and company papers that are usually interfiled with the muster rolls. However, I found that in the case of Confederate records, most of these papers are filed with the compiled military service records.

For anybody wishing to do research on Civil War ordnance material, there is an excellent article by archivist Mike Musick in the Winter, 1995 issue of Prologue, the journal of the National Archives, that describes what records are available.

Old Forts

I finished a first pass through the reports of boards of surveys and other material that promised to hold serial number data in these voluminous records. I found some interesting data such as the numbers of a half dozen Smith & Wesson Schofield revolvers used by the 9th Cav., and some trapdoor carbines issued to Indian scouts.

Other Research included a lengthy file of miscellaneous Ordnance Dept. records from the interwar period. This contains some of the later Armory-/Arsenal production summaries and other interesting items.

Records Move

The pre-WWII Ordnance Dept. material previously at Suitland, Md., is being moved to Archives I and will not be open for research again until Feb. 9, 1996. All post-WWII Ordnance material at Suitland has already been moved to Archives II and is available for research there.

Microfilm copies of material discovered during the move of Springfield Armory records to the New England Regional Archives have been sent to Archives I, and I am in the process of going through them.

The CIA has transferred another 500 feet of OSS records to the Archives, but there is no information yet on the contents.

TRADING POST

● Wanted: .45-70 Revolvers or any other guns made by C.M. Bates, Russel Wilison, Firearms Specialties and Penrod Musser. Also Looking for other makes of large rifle caliber revolvers, including Century Mfg., Phelps Mfg., and Super Six Limited.

Also looking for guns and information about "Whitmore & Smith", two gun makers from the Massachusetts or New Hampshire area. They built at least two revolvers that I know of, a .45-70 and a .50-110.

Also, documented proof that Colt made two .45-70 rifle caliber revolvers, as reported in "The American Rifleman" Oct. 1, 1923 and "Guns" magazine Dec. 1955. I am offering a $25 reward for any additional information on either of these guns, and a $500 reward for the positive location of either one. Richard E. RA-P Stock Mark

I have seen several reworked Colt revolvers of the World War II period marked "RA-P". I doubt it is a Remington mark.

C. P., Virginia

I just finished reading the current issue of U.S. Martial Arms Collector and found it, as usual, to be quite interesting. Stephen Marvin's article on the Remington '03 rifles was well thought out and presented some variations that most collectors are not aware of

I would like to make a comment regarding your assumption that "RA-P" stands for Remington Arms. I do not think this assumption is valid and believe that your original hypothesis that it identifies arms that were overhauled at Raritan Arsenal is correct. It is true that a number of Remington '03 rifles may be found with "RA-P" cartouches. However, so may many other types of U.S. small arms including Springfield and Rock Island '03s, M1 rifles, M1 carbines, M1917 rifles and military shotguns, among others. Obviously, none of these weapons were made by Remington so it would seem most unlikely that the "RA-P" cartouche could represent any sort of Remington factory cartouche. The rifles made by Remington that were accepted into government service were required to be stamped with the cartouche of the head of Remington's Ordnance District. The two gentlemen were either Roy L. Bowlin ("RLB") or Frank J. Atwood ("FJA"). The "RA-P" cartouche does not fit this requirement.

I would be interested to hear your thoughts on the above.

B.H.C., Louisiana

As I remarked in Issue 74, it should be an overhaul mark for Raritan Arsenal. It doesn't seem likely, but it is possible that it was also used by a Government inspector at Remington. There is no evidence for this, and it would violate the official directives. But it should be noted that "RA-P" was the personal stamp of an actual inspector; whereas "RLB" and "FJA" were official stamps used by the actual inspector. If the owner of the "RA-P" stamp had been assigned to inspect '03s at Remington when production was just getting underway, it is conceivable that he used his personal stamp (thinking that "RA" could as well stand for "Remington Arms" as "Raritan Arsenal") until directed to use "RLB".

Model 1842 Muskets Rifled & Sighted

In the most recent issue of U. S. Martial Arms Collector you mentioned some information on the issue of flintlocks in 1848. I would be interested in obtaining any information you have on Mexican War longarm issues, as well as any information on production and issues of 1842 muskets (including rifling and sighting).

J.R.E., Colorado

*The subject of rifled & sighted Model 1842 muskets is covered fairly well in Bob Reilly's book, United States Military Small Arms 1816 - 1865. I have found quite a bit in the Ordnance records on rifling and sighting muskets (also on the Maynard conversions by Remington), but most of it doesn't designate a particular model. My impression, tho, is that most of the work on Model 1842s was done by Harpers Ferry Armory for the Navy and Marine Corps.*

America's Misfires

Just received a copy of Misfire... The History of How America's Arms Have Failed Our Military; by William H. Hallahan (ISBN 0-684-19359-0); Scribners & Sons. $30US/$40Cdn. I've only skimmed it, but undoubtedly this volume will be of interest to your readers. The back room in-fighting, politics and frustrated private contractors are all laid bare.

The first eighteen chapters deal with the years prior to 1900. The M-1/M-14/then M-16 chapters are especially pithy, and are "hands-on" to many of us.

On a slightly different front; interesting guns are where you find them; could you shake the disk and see what can be found on this Colt Benét-Mercié automatic rifle; marked: USN/NHG-1912/cal. .30 Mark II MOD 1/No. 732. The Pat. date is July 30, 1907; with a "j" viewers mark. Any information that can be gleaned would be appreciated. A letter to Colt's is, of course, in progress.

Thank you for taking a look for my M1888 and Johnson, much appreciated. The Krag bayonet seemed the ideal choice for the wedding cake... and a great test of tolerance for Anna.

Bruce F. Ellis, Halifax Museum

I'd like to think that we have learned something from the numerous "misfires" that have occurred in U. S. arms procurement, but somehow I don't think so.

Sorry, we have no data on the Navy version of the Benét-Mercié automatic rifle (Model 1909 was the Army designation). Altho we have a fair amount of data on full-automatic weapons, with the exception of the M2 carbine we have not gone to the trouble of organizing it due to the limited collector interest.

Those Krag Bowie Knife bayonets are pretty delicate; hope that one made it through the reception OK.

Mills "H" Belt Plates

I am attempting to sort out the Mills belt "H" plate story in preparation for inclusion in an article on US cavalry accoutrements in the 1876 - 1890 period and would be extremely grateful for any research pointers - any authoritative reference works, location of pertinent documents, address of holding institutions etc. you might be able to give me to set me on the right track. Is it known specifically at which Arsenal or Armory these belt plates were produced and in what quantity? None of my sources (Dorsey "American Military Belts", "Military Collector and Historian"), is very specific as to development or production.

In this connection I noticed the intriguing notation "Winchester delivered 5,000 Mills cartridge belt plates in May, 1881." in the "Trapdoor Notes", of Newsletter Number 33. Did your research at that time produce further information such as were these plates manufactured by Winchester before being delivered to Springfield Armory? If so why couldn't the United States manufacture their own? Is it known which type of plate these 5,000 were - "1st type"- two piece stamped brass, "2nd type"- two piece cast brass with "slick face" or the "3rd type"- two piece cast brass with raised border? How much did they cost? Why did Winchester deliver them - were they part of the Hotchkiss equipment? I'm sorry to bombard you like this but, as I said, available information on the plates is very sketchy and the 'Trapdoor Notes' entry is the only "official" reference I have been able to locate. I shall of course be glad to pay any time and other costs incurred in answering my questions.

In the wider connection of Mills cartridge belt plates, perhaps I could ask a question of the Martial Arms Collector readership when you have the space? I have seen an illustration (Mills catalogue reprint ca. 1915/16) of a Model 1887 style - stamped brass Mills patent - plate with "Army Eagle" in the centre rather like the M1851 sword belt plate. The catalogue illustrates a rifle belt 'H' style but also mentioned that they are available for 2¼ belts" which I take to be the pistol belt. Can anyone enlighten me as to their intended use? Is the period of use known? Were they produced for Army officers rather than the more utilitarian "US" design that is commonly seen in photographs of enlisted men of the late 1880's and 90's. Did officers wear rifle H style plates? I have seen photographs of officers in the Spanish American and Philippine conflicts wearing revolver belts with the rectangular Mills "US" plates but have never seen a photograph of one of the Mills "Eagle" plates in either shape. Can anyone direct me to a photograph of a Mills "Eagle" cartridge belt plate (rifle or pistol) in use? Furthermore I don't have an example of this interesting plate and would be glad to purchase one with or without its kit should anyone have one for sale.

Finally Frank, I have also been told that there are USMC Mills Plates with "Eagle and globe" design. I have never seen one of these; have you?

D. P. F., England

Sorry, but I am unable to answer most of your questions. Altho I do have notes on ordnance files describing various procurements of cartridge belts and buckles, they rarely contain details such as the buckle design. The Mills belt, as I am sure you know, was unique in having the loops woven into the belt, a feature that was patented by Anson Mills. As far as I know, all the Mills belts furnished during the "H" buckle period were manufactured by the Thomas C.

Orndorff Company of Worcester, Mass. No doubt, the Government recognized the superiority of the Mills designed and preferred to purchase them from Orndorff rather than to try to acquire rights to manufacture them under the Mills patent.

Because the Mills patent didn't apply to the belt fastener, it is understandable that "H" buckles were manufactured by others, including Springfield Armory and probably Winchester and others.

Winchester Model 70 and Remington 1903 Rifles

I recently purchased a Winchester Model 70, Match Target Rifle, serial number 409541. The rifle has "U.S. Property" marked with an electro-pencil on the left side of the receiver. Other than the "U.S." markings, the rifle is a completely stock Model 70 with approximately 98% original finish and minimal wear. I assume that it is either a U.S. Army or U.S.M.C. rifle team weapon but I have no details on the rifle. The individual I purchased the rifle from stated that he bought it from a retired Marine officer. This may be the case; I purchased the rifle in the Washington, D.C., area. In any case, I would like to know if Springfield Research Service has any information relating to military use of Model 70 target rifles in this serial number range as well as any specific information on this particular rifle. Please let me know if you have information on this rifle and the cost of obtaining a letter from Springfield Research Service documenting the rifle.

In addition, I am trying to obtain information concerning the use of Model 70 sniper rifles by the 1st and 3rd Marine Divisions in Vietnam from 1965-1968. Several authorities on Marine snipers state that pre-war Model 70s were used as sniper rifles by the Marines in Vietnam. The photos I have examined appear to indicate Model 70 use by 1st Division Marines while 3rd Division Marines are often shown with M-40 Remingtons during approximately the same time period. Most of the Model 70s pictured have sporter stocks. This is consistent with the assertion that the rifles sent to Vietnam were pre-war Model 70s. However, I have noted photos of some rifles that clearly have target stocks. What I am trying to determine is whether the Marines relied exclusively upon pre-war Model 70s in a specific serial number block for sniper issue or if any available Model 70s were sent to Vietnam for the sniper program. Logic and prior military service would indicate that any weapons in U.S.M.C. inventory would be subject to issue, particularly if rifles with both sporting and target stocks were utilized. I would appreciate any insights that you may have concerning this subject.

I recently reviewed a number of back-issues of the U.S. Martial Arms Collector in the Rock Island Arsenal Museum. I noted a number of articles and letters on Remington M1903 and M1903 (Modified) rifles. In my opinion, insufficient attention has been given to these rifles. The articles were very helpful. I own several Remington 1903s. One rifle is an early Remington in all respects, milled parts, gas port on the right side of the chamber only, finger groove stock, etc. The rifle has no U.S. markings. The chamber area lacks all the characteristic markings and serial number. The stock has no cartouches or proofs. All parts have the standard "R" markings. The barrel has a Remington commercial style proofmark and "4" just above the upper barrel band. Finish is a dark green parkerizing consistent with M1903 (Modified) rifles. I was under the impression that early Remington M1903 rifles have a black parkerized finish similar to pre-WWII Springfield M1903s. The rifle is in almost new condition and shows minimal wear. Again, I would appreciate ideas that you might have on what this rifle is.

T. G. J., Illinois

The serial numbers we have on Win. M70 rifles only go up into the 3xx,xxx range. I have been trying to get more information on them.

I have found a fair amount of documentation on USMC usage of these rifles in the 1950s, when they were part of Rifle Team Equipment (RTE). A memo from the Quartermaster General of the Marine Corps, dated 28 March 1952, stated that 2,532 cal. .30/06 M70 rifles were on hand in Marine Corps stocks. A Technical Manual (TM 9-2316, dated 20 Dec 56) was published on it, and there was also a Supply Manual (ORD 7 SNL B-50) covering it.

A listing of RTE equipment dated 3 Sep 1953 showed the following varieties in use by the Marine Corps Rifle and Pistol Team:

RTE-75139 NRA light barrel, w/Lyman 48WH and 77AK sights, w/scope blocks and 1 1/4" swivels; RTE-75146 Medium heavy barrel w/Lyman 48WH and 77AK sights, w/scope blocks and 1 1/4" swivels; and RTE-75012 Snipers Match (300 Magnum cartridge heavy barrel w/telescope sight base).

A later listing includes RTE-75209, cal. .30-06 Winchester M70 w/Redfield International receiver sight & Redfield front sight.

On 5 Jun 1958, a regulation was issued concerning inscribing "US PROPERTY" on the receiver of these rifles.

Win. M70 rifles were also used by Army rifle teams; a memo dated 22 Sept 55 stated that 204 Winchester Model 70 National Match rifles had been procured to date and prescribed that they be marked "US Property" using the "electric etching process". Some of these rifles were modified by Evaluators Limited of Quantico, Va.; these were known as Van Orden Sniper rifles, after Gen. George Van Orden (who coincidentally had developed the M1903A1 Marine Corps Sniper Rifle).

The bulk of the Win. M70 serial number records we have come from the Navy Bureau of Ships R&P Club in 1960, indicating that Win. M70 rifles were also used by the USN.

The documentation we have indicates that all M70 rifles used by the USMC and Army had target-type stocks; but possibly the Navy, FBI, or other agencies procured some of these rifles with standard sporting stocks.

It seems altogether likely that some of these rifles were pressed into sniping duty during the Vietnam War, especially considering that certain models were given the "sniper rifle" designation by both the USMC and Army. It is possible that sporting stocks were substituted for the marksman stocks on these rifles, in order to reduce bulk and weight. However, if by "pre-war" you mean "pre-WWII", this is very unlikely due to the fact that the USMC rejected Winchester's offer to supply these rifles at the outbreak of WWII, and very few were in USMC stocks at that time.

With regard to your Remington M1903 rifle with unmarked receiver, I have no information on this.

Possibly one of our readers will come forward with some information on this one.

"M.S. Magazine Rifles"?

From the January 1995 issue of THE GUN REPORT, pg. 26 ff.: "... the entry in the logbook of the USS Brooklyn for the period October 1, 1904 through May 26, 1905. Listed in the armaments section are:

301 M.S. Magazine Rifles, .30 cal.

8 Lee Magazine Rifles, .45 cal.

14 Remington .22 cal rifles

90 Lee Straight Pull Rifles, 6m/m

168 Colts DA Naval Revolvers, .38 cal

The designation 'M.S.' stands for 'Mauser System' and refers to the new Springfield Model 1903 Rifle. One point to note is that the M1903 bolt-action rifle, such as were in the arms locker of the USS Brooklyn in 1905, had not been officially adopted for use by the Navy as of that date. The dates also suggest that these rifles were the .303 (sic) cal Springfields, and not the .30-06 caliber rifles that were adopted by the Navy the following year, to replace the Krag-Jorgensen rifle."

This is the source of my question to you a couple of weeks ago about '03 rifles on Navy ships in 1904. Bill Urick hasn't much more to say in corroboration of the "M.S." story. While we may not believe it, the question remains — what were these rifles?

C.S.F., Colorado

This question is easily resolved (if you are in the D.C. area) by going to the National Archives and examining the log book in question. Although it is somewhat difficult to read the old script, comparison with the "U" in "U.S.N." as written by the same person will show that the author of the Gun Report article misinterpreted a "U" for an "M"; hence the actual entry shows 301 "U.S. Magazine rifles", aka Krag-Jorgensen.

The mixture of shoulder arms aboard this ship is interesting in that it shows three different generations in use, or at least available for use, at the same time: the .45 Remington-Lee, 6mm Winchester-Lee, and .30 Krag. ♣

Small Arms Procurement By The New York City Police Department During World War Two

by R. M. Vivas

One of the first steps taken by the US Government after the declarations of war with Germany and Japan was to suspend the manufacture and sale of civilian firearms. All arms manufacturing was redirected towards production of military arms. Existing stocks of firearms, made before the beginning of hostilities and on dealers shelves at the beginning of the war, were frozen. In many cases the government, under blanket procurement programs, purchased all civilian arms that could possibly be used to support the war effort. The need for firearms was so severe that government purchasers would even visit police departments and purchase their confiscated or evidenciary firearms. This may help to explain the mysterious absence of any New York City Police Department Property Clerk records on firearms destructions from 1941 to 1943.

From 1942 to late 1945, there were no civilian arms being produced, and very few new pre-war guns were sold. When production of civilian arms resumed in 1945, the backlog of police and government orders received priority, with actual civilian sales not commencing until 1946.

The result of all this was to place most police departments in the position of not being able to equip their new officers with the appropriate sidearm. In New York's case, this was especially critical, since New York City was a vital political and military center.

For a brief time, new recruits were forced to assume patrol duties without a revolver. This was remarked upon in the New York Times on April 5, 1942:

57 POLICE LACK PISTOLS BECAUSE OF PRIORITIES

The Police Department was struggling yesterday to cut through a swathe of red tape and obtain revolvers for fifty-seven rookies who have been doing patrol with only a night stick because war priorities have blocked delivery of 250 of 300 weapons ordered and paid for in December.

The weaponless men are part of the class of 197 appointed in February. They attend the Police Academy daytimes and perform two hours of patrol each night, except Sunday, accompanied by a seasoned member of the department. The 140 others have sidearms. Ninety brought them along from previous service as special patrolman with the Board of Transportation.

Officials were hopeful that when the men are ready next month for full time patrol they will be properly equipped, but seemed none too sure of that.

To address the needs of of vital services for arms, the U.S. Government arranged for suitable military arms (since all arms production during the war years was military) to be made available through an agency known as the Defense Supplies Corp. Any organization or department with a legitimate need for firearms could arrange for their purchase through the Defense Supplies Corp.; thus, factories, power plants, police departments and others critical to the war effort could purchase arms for their security forces.

While many arms were available, the primary revolvers were the Smith & Wesson Victory Model and the Colt Commando. Both revolvers were virtually identical in concept and manufacture, and for that reason will be dealt with together in this article.

At the outbreak of World War 2 the most popular revolvers used by the New York City Police were the Smith & Wesson Military & Police and the Colt Official Police. Other guns such as the Colt Army Special or the Smith & Wesson .38/44 Heavy Duty were authorized for police use and were occasionally purchased by individual officers from outside sources, but these were not common.

When civilian arms production was halted, the M&P and the Official Police were dropped from production. In their place were the same guns, but in 'militarized' versions: the S&W Victory Model and the Colt Commando.

In both cases the guns were the mechanically the same as their pre-war ancestors, the M&P and Official Police. However, as military contract guns, certain modifications were made. The modifications were designed by the government as a way of reducing costs and machining time, allowing for the greatest number of revolvers in the least amount of time and at the best cost. The rich deep bluing that marked the guns was replaced by the non-reflective matte finish known as Parkerizing. Small machining steps, such as grooved triggers, topstraps and backstraps were dropped to speed production. Checkered walnut grips were replaced by smooth walnut or checkered plastic. Polishing was kept to a minimum, and toolmarks are frequently visible on the finished products.

Although these guns lacked the fine finish and detail of earlier times, they were as mechanically efficient and potentially lethal as they ever were. As a model variation of an already approved pattern, there was no need for them to be re-evaluated for police use.

Of the two revolvers, the Victory Model saw the greatest total production; almost 800,000 guns as compared to only 51,000 Commandos. In terms of NYCPD usage however, the Commando was issued to almost 1,100 officers, compared to 850 Victory Models.

These numbers may seem low, especially given the fact that there were virtually no arms available for officers from sources outside the police department. The implication is that during the war years, the NYCPD hired only 2,000 or so new officers. This bears commenting on, since it does affect firearms purchases.

As can be expected, the military requirement for increased manpower created a shortage of suitable police recruits. Along with the lack of suitable candidates, the police department faced shortages created by officers being drafted. At the beginning of the war, medical personnel, policemen and firemen were considered vital services; and they were, at the Mayor's behest, exempt from military call up. Mayor LaGuardia, responding to the need for more troops, removed the exemption for police officers, rationalizing that the 'new' warfare of firebombing cities would require experienced medical and fire personnel. Police, on the other hand, could accomplish their jobs without needing extensive prior experience.

The result of this was that at a time when NYC needed as many police as possible, it wound up graduating its smallest classes. Consequently, firearms purchases were relatively small. The extent of this can be more readily seen in the post war graduation figures, when more men were appointed in one year than during the entire WW2 period. The number of post war police appointments was so great that the Police Department actually had to send men and trucks to the factories to pick up revolvers so that the new officers would have them in time.

All of the wartime guns were shipped to Equipment Bureau at 400 Broome Street for sale to the police recruits.

Once the guns were received by the Equipment Bureau they were logged in and sold to recruits or officers needing new guns. It is worth noting that almost all of the Victory/Commando sales were made to new recruits. When veteran officers needed a new gun, they were sold one from the dwindling supply of pre-war guns that were still in inventory. By the end of the war, the supply of pre-war guns had been exhausted, and all officers regardless of years of service were receiving Victory Models or Commandos.

After the recruit purchased his gun (females did not purchase .38's), it would be examined by the firearms instructors to ensure that it was mechanically sound. They would then hand stamp the recruit's shield number on the backstrap or on the butt. Typically this was a 3,4 or 5 digit number. This would be the only way, other than a factory letter or NYCPD records check, to verify a gun as having been used by the NYCPD. Other than the shield number, there would be no marks indicating affiliation with the PD. Although the stamping of shield numbers on the guns was prescribed in police regulations, it's practice was somewhat spotty. Numerous war-time guns have turned up that appear in records as having been sold to an individual officer, but lack any type of stamping. There doesn't seem to be any reason for this, although one could speculate that the lack of sufficient manpower on the part of the police department required that an officer's time be spent on more pressing matters.

Although the Commando and Victory Model were sold under the auspices of the U.S. Government, the Police Department did have to pay for them. The Department's cost was approximately $40, while the individual officer typically purchased his gun from the department for approximately $42.

There are certain peculiarities found in the purchase of both models. Although the serial numbers of both guns are spread over several thousand guns, there are certain clearly defined ranges. Unlike other police purchases, if a Commando or Victory Model does not appear in police ledgers, it is almost certainly not a police purchase, since these guns were not available to the general public or gun dealers during the war. It is possible that an officer acquired his gun after the war from an outside source, but is not likely, since by then civilian production of better quality arms had resumed.

The Colt Commandos had the smallest total production, approximately 51,000 guns. The police purchase of 1,100 revolvers accounts for over 2% of the total production. As a result, there are numerous instances of serial numbers running consecutively. Several trios of consecutive guns can be found, and even a rare 6 consecutive serial numbers. It is worth noting that there were only two revolvers within the 17,000 to 29,999 range. Also, no revolvers above s/n 33512 were received.

The Smith & Wesson Victory Models, having had a greater production and smaller police distribution, are liberally spread over two major serial number blocks: 13x,xxx - 16x,xxx and 62x,xxx - 66x,xxx. Numerous guns also fall outside these ranges, but most are well within them.

A close examination of serial number records shows that one gun may have gone to the NYCPD, and the next gun in the serial number sequence went to the Army Air Corp. There does not appear to be any particular pattern to the distribution of the guns by the manufacturers. There were no 'police blocks' or 'Defense Supplies blocks'.

Rumors Of A Variant

An interesting locally produced variant of the Commando and Victory Model has been reported, but not verified. The rumors are so persistent that they bear repeating, with the caveat that, as yet, they are just that: rumors.

Several older retired officers maintain that the shortage of weapons for the police was so severe during the war that to allow for an officer to have an off duty gun, an unspecified number of Commandos (and S&W Victory Models) had their barrels cut back to 2 inches and fitted with shotgun bead front sights.

While a cut down NYCPD gun has yet to turn up, Smith & Wesson Victory Models from other sources that have had their barrels cut down with varying degrees of professionalism are not that uncommon. A 2-inch version of the Commando and of the Victory Model was produced, but these are scarce items. Although the police records do not specify the barrel lengths on the NYCPD guns, it can be stated with an extremely high degree of certainty that they were all of the 4 inch 'on duty' variety. This would tend to support the rumors of cut down guns; short barreled revolvers simply weren't commercially available.

One version of the cut down gun rumor that has been repeated often enough to make it worth considering is that the gun shortage was so severe that the cut down guns were a sort of 'precinct property' affair. When a patrolman ended his tour, he would receive the cut down off-duty gun from the patrolman who just came in to start the new tour. In this way, one gun could handle the off duty needs of two officers. If this were true, these cut down guns would not have any shield number stamped on the backstrap.

Again, all of this is just rumor. However it has enough logic in it to sound plausible. Until a verified NYCPD cut down revolver turns up though, one can only speculate.

I have seen some Victory models, almost all German/Austrian Police (Occupation-era) marked, that have had the barrels cut down and the front sights redone with varying degrees of expertise. Apparently the cutting down of barrels as needed was not an isolated practice.

Post-War Guns

At the end of the war, the supply of Colt Commandos was exhausted. A large number of Victory Models still remained in inventory and some of these were sold after the war when the supply of post-war commercial guns was still low. However, as civilian arms production resumed and larger quantities of guns became available, police recruits would purchase the new finely finished arms rather than the cruder, more utilitarian, wartime production guns.

A large number of Victory Models remained in inventory for this reason, finally being traded to Colt's New York office at 20 Vesey Street in 1950 and 1951.

Because the war years occupied only a short 5 years of NYCPD history, the entire record of World War Two purchases was saved amongst a small batch of records. Unlike other guns, the serial numbers and dates of sales are available for almost the entire amount of Commandos and Victories. These serial numbers are in the SRS database.

I would be interested in communicating with anyone who has a Victory Model, or any other arm, associated with the New York City Police Department. Contact RM Vivas, 1673 East 16th Street #108, Brooklyn NY 11229-2901, CompuServe Address: RM VIVAS 73352,2254 or InterNet: 73352,2254@CompuServe.com

Guns "Lettered" During Current Period

The following firearms were documented during the period covered by this issue. If you would like to get in touch with the person a letter was written for, send us your message together with a stamped envelope with blank address. We will affix a label and forward your message. There is no guarantee that you will receive a reply, of course; but we write quite a few letters for dealers, who would no doubt like to hear from someone interested in a particular gun. Make sure that your message contains the serial number and model of the gun you are interested in, and that you furnish separate messages and envelopes if you are interested in more than one. THIS OFFER, FOR GUNS IN THIS ISSUE, EXPIRES ON APRIL 1, 1996.
